Who are teams in the playoffs that have impressed you ?

For me it's the magic. Despite awful shooting , they have really taken the defending champs to the brink. I'm a little biased as a Duke fan but Paolo and Franz are absolute dogs and my favorite young wing duo in the league those guys have shown they are built for playoff basketball with their shot making ability and competing defensively. I truly hope orl can get those kids some real shooters and a true point guard theirs another level their games and overall team can reach if they simply had some floor spacing and average guard play around them.

Randle has been a revelation. His bully ball has worked perfectly on offense, and his physically is a big reason LeBron has run out of gas

Randle knows he can out muscle most guys one on one, and then makes the correct read when doubles come. He also plays defense with his chest, not hands so he doesn't get the fouls Kat did. Luka and Bron can't just shove Randle out of the way on every drive.

iso-ball.

You knew when I KNEW it would work? When Rashad McCants co-signed it.

The biggest revelation to me has been Randle's commitment on the defensive end. He looks much more engaged and focused right now. I'm hoping he won't stay as interested in the second round (if he beats his former team and if the Warriors beat the Rockets).

Randle has been past beyblade mode for years now, unfortunately he's been hurt the last few times the Knicks were in the playoffs and everyone was watching so people still think he's the Randle from 4-5 years ago

⊖ ↑ 36 ↓ Répondre ...

 TappedRidgeline • -1 m.

Randle's playoff reputation really ignores the circumstances. He had 1 actual poor playoff series against the Hawks, with 3 million year old DRose as the next best player on the roster, and then had like 3 ankle sprains in 2 weeks the next time the Knicks made the playoffs. This is really his first opportunity to shine, and it's been fun to watch him and donte in these playoffs on another team.

Magic is one of those "if they figure it out, they're gonna be scary" examples. I've been pretty high on them for 2+ seasons. Hoping for health for them next year. They will be a regular conference contender if they get a little more 3pt shooting and continue to ride the growth of Paolo and the Wagners.

Wolves are not surprising if you had watched them, I had picked them to beat the Lakers in six and was specifically the team I wanted to dodge in the first round the most.

They have the highest ceiling of all the teams outside of OKC because they can be both elite offensively and defensively. Their only real flaw is decision making at times, but even then Ant has improved hugely on that end.

I think they were ultimately underestimated as too many crowned the Lakers as being better than they are actually are. Especially after the OKC H2Hs where their shooting output just wasn't very realistic of who they were in a Playoff setting.

I think the next best team is the Clippers, but man they have definitely found ways to lose games against the Nuggets.

But ultimately think it's going to end up pretty comfortably a OKC-MIN WCF and that is going to be an insane series.

I get frustrated with his sloppy turnovers a lot but he needs just one more guy who can score or create their own shots for themselves or others. Hopefully it's Ivey. Cade is sloppy with the ball and forces a lot of bad turnovers but he's kind of in the position he has to. Too many possessions where we can't even get the ball inside 30 feet of the basket if he doesn't touch the ball remonnoki • -1 m.

Cade has really impressed with his play but even more so with his leadership. I think Detroit has a maturity and emotion problem which can be buffed out with age and experience. He's holding both himself and his teammates accountable. Him pushing his rookie away yesterday to keep him in check, chill him out and stop him from getting a stupid tech was some real shit.

4 Répondre ...

Relevant_Gold4912 • -1 m.

I don't think that's really the issue. It's a talent issue. Stew and Holland definitely run hot but that's not the issue. The team feeds off that a lot of times. They just don't have a secondary scoring option outside of Cade especially with Ivey hurt. A lot of this is being passed on to Dennis Schroeder/Malik Beasley/Tobias Harris which is a good patch job for this season but it's not reliable or what you want in a playoff series.

Bla bla bla the narrative that the Warriors aren't also playing extremely physical basketball is crazy.

Warriors fans have done a masterful job of complaining so much and so loudly that you have people out here legit thinking the physicality is just one sided while they're playing some pristine brand of basketball.

 1   Répondre ... 1 réponse supplémentaireMannerSuperb AO • -1 m.

That's on the officials more than the teams. If the refs are swallowing their whistles and letting a team play ultra physical they're going to continue to play that way until they start racking up fouls. I truly don't get some of the ppl complaining about the physicality of teams on this sub you can't have it both ways. This sub had stretches of complaining about how soft the game has gotten and then when refs are allowing teams to play more physical then their playing football

  1   Répondre ...NotManyBuses • -1 m. Comm. du top 1%

I'm not responsible for the takes of others. I'm not anti-physicality but I am a fan of talent and skill in the game. Orlando and Houston have very little.

Both teams are hilariously overmatched in terms of shooting and scoring ability and have resorted to cheap shots and fouls to hurt their opponents instead of actually winning with their game. I'm not going to reward or applaud that behavior, it's not some equalizing skill to try to injure your opponents. Goons like Anthony Mason and Bill Laimbeer were bad for the game and I would've said as much at the time.

Wolves by far. Particularly Edwards. I hadn't seen any Wolves games going into the playoffs, so I had no clue just how amazing Edwards was and he's really in the middle of a massive leap these playoffs. They have a strong team -- and that's important these playoffs more than ever. Hero/iso ball is essentially dead because of how good defences have gotten.

It's been a joy to watch the Lakers/Wolves series and I'm becoming a huge fan of Ant. OKC, Celts and Cavs are performing up to expectation. Kinda always knew that GSW would muscle through because of their sheer playoff and championship experience. Wasn't expecting the way Wolves have torn into the Lakers and exposed their lack of roster depth.

 27   Répondre ...Other-Owl4441 • -1 m.

Hell, I would be excited to see what Paolo's numbers look if the Magic were just ONE of the slowest pace team and just ONE of the lowest scoring teams and not dead last in both.

I wonder what he would average if the Magic were 25th in pace and 25th in scoring versus 30th.

pistons for sure. despite the crying about the whistle being too loose or too tight depending on the outcome, despite the knicks being incredibly healthy and the pistons being down ively and now stew, they have been in every single game and cade is proving why he was the correct #1 pick in a draft that includes mobley, barnes, wagner, and sengun. once they are able to replace tobias (great signing for a stopgap veteran) through either trade, FA, or draft, they will be a top 5 team in the east for many years.

majority of his attempts from dribble pull-ups. He was good in this area before but now he's elite and it's obviously a vital component to closing out games and stifling runs.

2. Jaden has taken an incremental step on offense, becoming much more willing/able to dribble-drive into short range pull-ups and attempts at the rim. Again, he would do this last season but now he's doing it with greater consistency.
3. Donte as a bench creator/ball-handler who can hold his own somewhat on defense is a huge addition that helps mitigate Conley having down streaks.
4. Julius is less of a dynamic scorer compared to KAT but he still fills the role as a "get-a-bucket" iso guy. He's also a better passer off the dribble although that hasn't been as apparent in this series so far.
